On March 22, 2011 the U.S. Census Bureau released the detailed population totals and demographic characteristics concluded from the 2010 Census. Now the broader discussions begin about the implications for the future of Michigan’s cities and economy. Professor Emeritus Reynolds “Ren” Farley will explore with us the likely changes that may occur, and the economic and demographic trends that will reshape the state of Michigan in light of this new data. Please join us for a very enlightening and long awaited discussion!

Dr. Reynolds Farley is Professor Emeritus at the Population Studies Center and Department of Sociology at the University of Michigan, where he served as Chairman of the Sociology Department. Dr. Farley’s research interests concern population trends in the United States, focusing on racial differences, ethnicity, and urban structure. A recognized leader among social scientists and social demographers on policies concerning families, welfare, health and education, his current work includes an investigation of the residential consequences of revitalization in the Rust Belt. Dr. Farley has received many distinguished awards, including the American Academy of Arts and Sciences Award. He earned his Ph.D. from the University of Chicago and first worked for the Census Bureau in 1962.
